The new king, George VI, made his older brother the duke of Windsor. Prince Andrew's lease of Royal Lodge is for 75 years, with the Crown Estate as landlord, and there is no annual tenancy charge.

At the same time fox-hunting was one of his permitted indulgences, and there he was. The prince was in the gayest spirits, playing on his guests harmless practical jokes, and putting all at their ease. Wonderful southern hospitality! Churchill vetoed the king's plan to follow up these visits with a tour of the Far East, and especially India.

The prince's illness evoked a new enthusiasm for the monarchy. Unlike his father, he expected the Windsors' marriage to last, and George VI pointed out to Baldwin that HRH was a title which once given could not be removed: the fear was that the duchess would leave the duke and become a maverick HRH, conceivably even married to a fourth husband. Through frequent illness and two operations, Prince Albert had shown considerable determination during his time in the forces.
