New industrial companies therefore hungered for markets to keep their high-volume production facilities operating. Spencer remarked upon his first visit to Carnegie's steel mills in Pittsburgh, which Carnegie saw as the manifestation of Spencer's philosophy, "Six months' residence here would justify suicide. Many of the laws contained exceptions that allowed younger children to work with parental consent, and some allowed the hour limitations to be exceeded if the additional work was voluntary.

Similarly, farm labor historically had its roots as a home-based undertaking. Society viewed them simply as an extra money-earning appendage of the mother or father. The padrone was paid a certain rate per unit of output and in turn subcontracted with the laborer.
